NINJA AT HEART

BY MARTA LEŚNIAK

"Finally!" sighed the boat passenger, trying to tame his windswept beard.

The mysterious traveller stepped ashore a rocky island and moved towards the lighthouse. When he entered it, he shouted, "Alone at last! Just me and. . ."

". . .us!" finished a voice from inside. "I'm Echo Zane. And this is Gizmo."

The traveller groaned when he saw the Nindroid and his little companion.

"Hi, guys. It's me, Jay. Ninja of Lightning. I mean. . . former Ninja of Lightning."

"Jay!" Echo Zane cheered. "I didn't recognize you because of that beard."

Jay sighed. "I created this disguise so that no one would recognize the old Jay in me. I'm the new Jay - an artist and loner who uses paints and brushes instead of elemental powers! I seek solitude, but it seems I need to find a more deserted place."

"Stay, friend! We'll pretend we're not here," urged Echo Zane.

"Beep!" Gizmo agreed.

Jay stayed. The next morning, he hung up a curtain of old sails and set up his studio behind it. He announced he would only leave it when he needed the toilet. But soon. . . he could smell fresh buns.

Jay peeked out from behind the curtain and saw a table full of treats. "Who is this feast for? You are robots, and robots don't eat," he noted.

"Dr. Julien, my inventor, programmed me this way - when there are guests, there must be breakfast," Echo Zane explained.

Seconds later, Jay was sitting at the table, drinking cocoa.

After breakfast, Jay hid behind the curtain again. Suddenly, a loud SPLAT! surprised him. A ball hit the picture he was working on, turning it into a big, colourful stain. Jay tucked the ball under his arm.

"My apologies," said Echo Zane when he saw Jay's menacing expression.

"Beeep!" the other robot also apologized.

"We'll play outside," said the Nindroid, and Jay breathed a sigh of relief.

Peace didn't last long. A loud BOOM sounded outside! A huge Leviathan was hitting the shore with his tentacles to get rid of the Starteeth that had stuck onto his body. Echo Zane was already in the water, carefully unhooking the Starteeth. Jay joined him and treated the creature's wounds with pieces of the curtain he had ripped off. Soon the rescue operation was over. The Leviathan swam away, waving its tentacle goodbye.

"Well done!" called Jay.

"Tha-than-kssss. . ." muttered the Nindroid, collapsing on the shore.

"Beeeeep!" screamed terrified Gizmo.

"Relax. It's probably a minor short circuit," Jay reassured him.

Jay carried Zane Echo to the lighthouse. The Nindroid's mechanism resembled. . . an aquarium. As Jay was wondering how to fix his friend, a cheerful "Beeep!" echoed in the lighthouse. Gizmo found Dr. Julien's note on What to do when your invention accidentally gets wet. He advised putting a wet robot in a container with rice - it would absorb the water.

After a while, Echo Zane was taking a rice bath and was soon dry. Success! Now Jay only had to start the mechanism. Unfortunately, Dr. Julien hadn't written how to do this at home.

Jay realized he could only save Echo Zane if he became Lightning Ninja once again. He assumed a fighting stance and hit the Nindroid with a power beam. The inside of the lighthouse flashed with a blinding light.

As the light dimmed, Jay saw someone hanging around his paintings. It was Echo Zane!

"What happened to the curtain?" he asked.

"I won't need it any more," Jay answered. "I've found that I'm much better at being a friend than a loner. But I need to do something about this beard first," he added, smoothing his electrified hair.
